He recognized the many ways individual volunteers serve: office assistance, stocking shelves, bagging groceries, distributing food in the front office, and a variety of other jobs. All have contributed to LCRC's ability to expand services to meet needs in our community.

He never went back to the banjo.

By time he was in high school, Monteith and friends were listening to Bluegrass and practicing what they heard from the greats in the field. Soon were performing at clubs and different venues in the D.C. area. He went to high school with outstanding musicians such as bass-player Tom Gray, one of the members of Seldom Scene, who went on to be inducted in the Bluegrass Hall of Fame. The high school band quickly gained in popularity, playing in a number of states near D.C.

quickly gained in popularity, playing in a number of states near D.C. Lake Anna resident Monteith said, "We played several times at the Old Dominion Barn Dance in Richmond and at the North Carolina State Fair in Raleigh. Headliners at the state fair were the Everly Brothers. And we played with the Grand Ole Opry Road Show, sharing stages and dressing rooms with Buck Owens, George Jones and the Louvrin Brothers among others. We also had a weekly 30-minute radio show on WDON in Wheaton, Md., which was then the go-to country radio station." The teens also played at the Washington Coliseum a week before the Beatles appeared there in their North American debut.

Monteith explained that Bluegrass is not gospel, and it's not country. The lyrics evoke focus on home, and country living. Many songs have roots in the past when Bluegrass emerged in the 1930s-1940s. His groups have an every-changing repertoire to keep audiences returning.

He played with Buzz Busby and the Bayou Boys, another Bluegrass celebrity, and enjoyed every experience working with the greats. Early bands included Bill Torbert who went on to play with Jimmy Martin, LeMar Greer who went on to play with Bill Monroe and Ed Ferris a long time bass player with the Country Gentleman and Bill Harrell. He knew Mike Seeger (folksinger) and was introduced to Joan Baez at Seeger's house. At times working three jobs to make ends meet, Monteith often played professionally four nights a week. Perhaps the greatest moment of his performing career came one night when his band played "Cinderella," among other songs at Victor's Tavern near Fort Belvoir. Debbie (Deborah Basch Campbell), an Army nurse happened to show up for the show with a girlfriend. Talk about love at first sight! Debbie pointed him out and said to her friend, "See that guy? I'm going to marry him." Three years later, in 1972, she did. He still plays "Cinderella," adding, "I still wonder what a good-looking Army nurse saw in a broke-down guitar picker, but I'm glad she did. He added that their 47th anniversary was in February 2019.

In 1987, while living in Fairfax City, Monteith formed the Skystone Bluegrass Band with five other players. Debbie became the band's manager for many years, booking as many as 50-60 shows annually. She was also the inspiration the band's name. From the Southwest, Debbie liked Native-American jewelry; the name for turquoise is Skystone. "We began wearing turquoise scarves with our white hats when performing," he said.

Monteith and Debbie moved to the lake 19 years ago after his retirement as general superintendent for bus company operations for the Washington Metropolitan Transit Authority, the fifth largest bus company in the United States. In 1987 he formed Skystone Bluegrass Band in Fairfax City. The band now includes all local musicians. He also has a three-person "fun band." It features Paul Clark on upright 6 • LOUISA LIFE • March 15 - April 11, 2019 bass, Stu Trice on keyboard and Monteith on the guitar, with all three adding the vocal harmony. Bluegrass vocals usually involve a trio as well as soloists.

"Bluegrass music is odd," Monteith said. "Everyone thinks they can play, but it is not as easy as that. Monteith is a perfectionist with each of the groups. He teaches members "what I want them to know," and how he wants every note played. There are no "jam sessions," he said. "Everybody has got set parts."

Skystone practices weekly a large room in the Monteith's home, and the Honkytonk Bluegrass Band, generally rehearses a few times prior to a gig. Monteith said that each piece has a kickoff and an ending that must be perfect every time, but there may be a little variation in the middle sections.

One new player was astonished at how many times Monteith stopped the group so the player would get things right. The new player said, "You guys are serious about this music." He said he guessed that Monteith really meant it. Monteith said that comment "inadvertently named our third project "Serious Bluegrass."

The current Skystone Bluegrass Band includes Bob Payne on mandolin and vocal; Paul Clark on bass and vocal; Larry Carpenter, five-string banjo, Ben Outland, guitar and vocal, Tommy Barlow, dobro, and Monteith on guitar and lead vocal.

Occasionally Monteith comes up with an idea for a song which he presents to the band and they work out the musical details. Once it is completed, the song doesn't change.

He said that his bands are show bands and the volume often reflects that. His groups play to perform, not to supply background music while the audience drinks wine and visits with friends.

Although the bands play in a number of venues, they are well known in the Louisa area, playing to a sold-out crowd at the Louisa Arts Center in September 2018, and frequently at places like the Lake Anna Winery, plus non-traditional weddings and parties This season they have booked their 29th yearly appearance at the Fairfax City Fourth of July Parade, and their eighth yearly show at Brentsville Courthouse Bluegrass Festival in Manassas. Upcoming area shows would be their eight appearance at the Louisa County Agricultural Fair, a second yearly show at the Lake Anna Tractor & Hardware and a first headlining position at the Small Country Bluegrass Festival and benefit show in early spring. He said the band hopes to play again this fall at the Louisa Arts Center.

Monteith has several guitars and a special one that sits on the stage at the Skystone's performances. It's a Buck Owen's red-white-and blue.limited edition that he enjoys playing. His groups have made three albums in different styles: country-flavored Bluegrass, Traditional Bluegrass and Serious Bluegrass.

He still plays "Cinderella" for his sweetheart of 47 years and is philosophical about how Bluegrass has affected his life. "Relationships in Bluegrass last forever," he said.

Monteith added that he will play as long as he can. But, ever the perfectionist, he said, "If I can't do it the way I want to, then it's time to stop."

Life Volunteers from New Community Church fill 400 backpacks every month for children who need extra food on weekends when they are away from school. In partnership with Louisa County Public Schools, LCRC has expanded its Children's Summer Feeding Program to get healthy food delivered into certain neighborhoods during the months of June, July and August. There are also boxes of "kidfriendly" easy-to-open food that families can pick up at LCRC, the library, and six additional locations around the county in the summer for their children who depend on government lunch programs when school is in session.

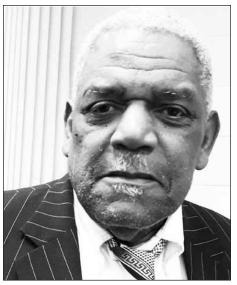

While continuing its existing food and clothing assistance programs, LCRC is added two new programs in early February. Runnett introduced Joanne Falkenthal, volunteer coordinator of Caring Connections, a new program designed to provide personal visits to homebound Louisa County residents. With the decline in demand for Mealson-Wheels due to other meal delivery options, LCRC recognized there was still a need for face-to-face visits for individuals who are isolated and confined to their homes because of age or disability. Caring Connections volunteers will receive training and then be matched with a "client" to be visited each month.

The organization's new Dental Assistance Voucher Program will provide help to adults who have no dental insurance and cannot afford to see a dentist. Over 56 percent of Louisa County residents have not had dental care in more than a year. This program will accept applications from incomequalified citizens who will receive vouchers to be used at participating dental offices. On hand for the volunteer luncheon were Donna Kirley, a retired dental hygienist, and Vickie Southall, RN and assistant professor of Nursing at the University of Virginia. They have helped organize the new dental voucher program.

Runnett said LCRC is also building a new warehouse across the street from its existing facility to meet storage demands and to provide more space for the Community Closet. Irene Luck, longtime volunteer, has said that the Community Closet will continue to provide new and gently used clothing for adults and children, but the new warehouse will allow enough room for used furniture, appliances, and household items.

These are only a few of the many programs keeping the volunteers busy.

Pastor Everett spoke from personal experience of the fun he has volunteering "in the back" of the food pantry warehouse. "It's crazy and I love every minute of it," he said. He explained how people who are routinely in need come to churches looking for money or food but, because of "the blessing of LCRC," these individuals can be sent to the LCRC office where they are screened, given the help they need, and referred to other available community resources. He explained that local churches, even large ones like his, simply cannot provide such great service by themselves.

In his closing remarks, Everett reiterated his concern that our rich nation still sees a lot of poverty and that forgotten people need to be helped. He called LCRC a "gold mine" in this community and reminded volunteers, "You are doing the work of the Kingdom of God."

Behind the Wheel

By Pat Wilson Correspondent

Ten-year-old Steven Summerville watched a classroom pottery demonstration. With fascination he observed an artisan use a pottery wheel to change a lump of clay into a bowl. That exhibition would influence his entire life and education.

"He captivated me," said Summerville. "So, my parents paid for me to do a summer workshop. I made dinosaurs from clay. My two interests became art and science, which I have learned are both active in the same part of the brain."

So, growing up in Kalamazoo, Michigan, Summerville took numerous high school art classes that involved painting, sculpture, printmaking and ceramics. He continued his studies at Berea College in Kentucky, and widened his skills to include production throwing, which is making more than one of a particular piece.

"I learned to create strong forms in stoneware that were both useful and satisfying," he said. "My mentors not only helped me develop technical proficiency but also personal style and a reverence for a well-made, useful item."

Summer apprenticeships were essential to his college financial aid and involved 40 hours a week making production pieces from an assigned list. Any additional time, the potter could spend in the studio experimenting with his own techniques and designs. He also had the opportunity to work with David Leach, a porcelain potter who conducted several summer workshops. Summerville graduated with a degree in studio art with an emphasis in ceramics.

Pooling his money permitted him a month or so in Southwestern England. Summerville visited potteries and observed well-respected masters including Leach. Returning to live in Fredericksburg, he spent four years honing his skills and developing his individual style while working with fellow potter Dan Finnegan. Other obligations led to his temporarily abandoning the field.

But, after a ten-year absence from his passion, Summerville left his job at a plant/landscaping nursery in Richmond and returned to the studio specializing in earthenware, first utilizing a friend's basement and later a spare room at the Bumpass antique shop of Melvin Edwards, his companion for 30 years. He opened his studio/gallery, Virginia's Dream, in 1993.

"Since high school, I had always dreamed of becoming a professional potter," he said. "My mother encouraged me, but it was only after her death that I decided to attempt to take the exciting but also frightening plunge. It was the best decision I ever made, and I named the business in honor of her."

His first attempt to sell his pieces was at a Cary Street cooperative shop in Richmond.

"I took a banana box from a grocery store and filled it with breakfast bowls, mugs, cups and plates carefully wrapped in newspaper," he said. "In three weeks they sold everything I had made."

This success led to his attending over two dozen festivals and shows at year, first in the Richmond area and soon throughout the state and even as far as the Midwest. Summerville and Edwards loaded a van with his pieces and pulled a small camper to the locales. His embellished style soon developed a following, and a website added to demands.

Today, Summerville maintains a garden and keeps a few goats, llamas and chickens, but the majority of his time is allocated to his studio. There, he throws, fires, embellishes and glazes

What's In Your Water

Contributed by the Virginia Cooperative Extension, Louisa County

Did you know that private water supplies like wells and springs are unregulated? It is the responsibility of the homeowner to regularly test water quality, maintain the water system, and address any problems.

Affordable, confidential water testing and education will be offered through Virginia Cooperative Extension Louisa County/Virginia Tech.

The informational meeting as well as picking up your kits will be on Monday, 6/17/2019 @ 6:00pm. The meeting location is in the Louisa County Office Bldg., 1 Woolfolk Ave, Louisa, VA 23093 - VCE Meeting room on the 2nd floor of the building.

The drop off of water samples is on Wednesday, 6/19/2019 7:30am-9:00am at the ENTRANCE to the Louisa County Office Bldg.,1 Woolfolk Ave, Louisa, VA 23093 distinctive dishes, bowls, plates, canisters and cups - just a few of his creative pottery options. He admits that the work requires dedication and discipline but is worth the effort.

"It has brought me such joy," he said. "I feel truly blessed to have this lifestyle and cherish the long-lasting friendships I have made over the years."

The potter will spend as many as 12 hours a day in his studio. Starting with a one-pound lump of earthenware, Summerville first kneads it, called wedging, and then centers it on one of his pottery wheels – kick or electric. Keeping his fingers and the earthenware moist, the potter slowly shapes and smooths the piece. If desired he will attach handles, form spouts or create lids. After the earthenware partially dries, Summerville brushes on three layers of underglaze in a chosen color and embellishes the piece with slip, a more fluid version of the clay. The greenware will be fired in his kiln, then clear-glazed and refired.

"All my pieces are microwavable, dishwasher safe and contain no lead," he said. Although the artist prefers time spent in his studio creating new designs and color combinations or replicating old favorites to fill online orders, each year he travels to several arts and crafts shows. He is a regular at local festivals, shows and the Mineral Farmer's Market as well as participates in several fundraisers including the upcoming Empty Bowls. His pieces are featured at Nourish Louisa on West Main Street.

Occasionally, Summerville holds open houses at his studio/gallery at 1118 Bordon Road, just south of the village of Bumpass. Visitors are welcome on Saturday and Sunday, noon to 5 p.m. on March 16-17 and 23-24. Anyone wanting to visit the gallery at other times should first contact him at 540-894-3524 ordevostudio@gmail.com. He maintains a calendar of upcoming events and examples of his work at the website, www.stevensummerville.net and on Facebook.

Swirls, circles and dots of fluid slip give the pottery its unique embellishment.

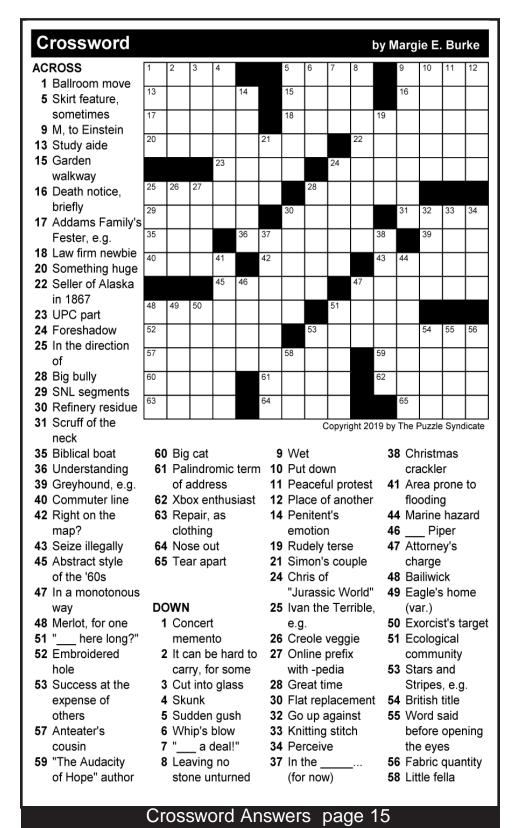

Participation is voluntary and confidential. Water samples collected by participating homeowners will be analyzed for 14 parameters, including bacteria, metals, nitrate and hardness at a cost of $60.

Results and water system care and maintenance information will be shared at an informational meeting on Wednesday, July 17, 2019, 6:00pm at the Louisa County Office Bldg., 1 Woolfolk Ave., Louisa VA 23093 – VCE meeting room on the 2nd floor of the building.

All information is kept strictly confidential and results are reported only to the homeowner. Please contact Crysti Hopkins, VCE Louisa, FCS Agent 540-967-3422 or email Hcrysti2@vt.edu to pre- register!

Knead Bread

okingly, Vincenzo Mazzone declares "I'm Italian and three generations of my family had been in the restaurant business. What would you expect?" The answer is his passion for baking bread. The artisan also shows his sense of humor in naming his start-up business, Knead Bread.

The result of his heritage and zeal is a state-of-the-art, USDA approved commercial-quality bakery located in the converted garage/workshop of his home near Lake Anna. Complete with large worktables, industrial-sized equipment, a walk-in cooler and six stone ovens, the spacious structure allows Mazzone to create loaves of bread from classic ciabatta variations to basic peasant breads.

"Right now I'm starting with a select number of breads," he said. "Several are variations of ciabatta in loaves about 12 to 16 inches in length. Ciabatta is Italian style bread with the typical ingredients of flour, water, salt and yeast, but the secret is in how you handle the dough which is a four-hour process with short intervals of rest."

Ciabatta comes in plain, sesame seed, cinnamon-raisin or an olive with roasted garlic and Parmigiana Reggiano. He also markets plain artisan peasant bread and honey-wheat peasant bread that uses local wildflower honey from Herb Cadel. Another specialty is wild peasant bread with cranberries, golden raisins, sunflower seeds and walnuts. His sunburst bread features a touch of rye and wheat flour and is made plain or with pumpkin and sunflower seeds.

Mazzone has a philosophical outlook for his baking.

"We go out into a field. Plant wheat, it grows. We harvest it, beat and smash it, basically to its death. We take that flour, mix it with water, salt and yeast, to bring it back to life," he said. "Then, we watch that grow as it rises; then shape and form it and put it into a hot oven, to kill it again. Then, we enjoy it!"

As Mazzone explores locales to feature his breads, they are currently available at Nourish Louisa on West Main Street and in Dickinson's Store at Ware's Crossroads in Mineral. Two Community Supported Agriculture businesses carry his products. Meredith Farms Local Food delivers his breads to

For Louisa County Rotary Club - The Play's the Thing

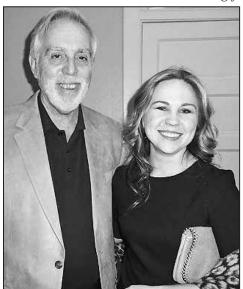

By Pat Wilson Correspondent

For the 16th year, the Louisa County Rotary Club, through its foundation, sponsored a performance of the Barter Theater Players on stage at the Louisa ArtsCenter. The Friday evening, February 15 presentation, was seen by a full house who laughed and mused as the mischief Tom Sawyer cavorted with his compatriot Huckleberry Finn to locate treasure as well as save a wrongly accused man.

The event included a reception for sponsors and invited guests prior to the show and, after the play, an on-stage question and answer period with the six actors, as well as a meet and greet with dessert in the Purcell Gallery.

The performance not only delighted the adult audience, but through a mission of the club's foundation, the show was staged earlier in the day at Louisa County High School's Alan Jackson Theater. This allowed close to 350 middle school students to experience a live theatrical performance. The players also presented Princess and the Pea to about 650 pre-K through third graders. The Rotarians, in conjunction with the public schools, are dedicated to projects that open educational opportunities for Louisa's youth.

"Each year we give a scholarship to a graduating senior, dictionaries to third grade students, sponsor speech and essay contests, send students to leadership camps and help with requests for classroom supplies from special education teachers," said Patrick Hanley, coordinator of the Barter project. "Last year we even purchased a 3-D printer for the high school's technical education program."

Patrick Hanley, Louisa County Rotary Club coordinator for the Barter Player production, thanked Sarah Perkinson, Dominion Energy external affairs representative, for the company's generous sponsorship.

Hanley noted that the performances would not have been possible without the generous support of over 40 businesses and individuals with Dominion Energy being the producing sponsor. Also contributing to the successful event was the town of Louisa staff, as well as the Louisa Arts Center staff and volunteers. customers along with its meats, fruits and seasonal vegetables. Phantom Hill Farm sells his products along with naturally-grown vegetables. He works with sellers through an online ordering system. Several area restaurants and a high-end grocery distributor are expressing interest.

Mazzone plans to return to the Mineral Farmer's Market which reopens in May. He has provided bread for meals held by local fundraising organizations and will participate at the Louisa Humane Society's Empty Bowls fundraiser later this month. The baker is taking small steps to increase his sales, but since he is the only "employee," he does not want to lessen quality for increased quantity.

"I haven't set up a website yet, but that is in my future plans," he said. "I bake on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings, then deliver in the afternoons. I have a great resource, Jameala Cross, who helps me tremendously with the paperwork, pricing and marketing. LKA Signs provides labeling."

Bread baking is not new to the artisan. Mazzone was reared in upstate New York and teenage jobs revolved around the kitchens of restaurants, bakeries and pizzerias. His specialty was working with dough. But, since his father was in the construction business, Mazzone followed in those footsteps for 30 years.

"My dad had Earth and Stone, a construction company which did a little bit of everything from siding to decks and remodeling. I did a lot of the tile work," he said.

Branching out on his own, Mazzone worked on projects that resulted in short term residences in numerous locales from California to South Carolina. Often his diverse skills led to contractors requesting his expertise for their upscale housing. During those years, Mazzone's baking was limited to personal enjoyment and occasional gifts, although the time did allow him to experiment with ingredients and techniques. Last year, one job helped to influence his decision.

"A New York contractor friend asked me to do three custom bathrooms in his house," he said. "The job required other work so a two-month job resulted in five months."

Mazzone was torn between moving around to do similar work or spending the majority of his time living in Louisa and using the spacious kitchen in the house that he designed and, with help from friends and his brother Carmine, had built ten years ago on land near the lake. Another factor was that his parents, Mildred and Domiano, had retired in the county.

A suggestion from a friend helped Mazzone make a final decision. At the insistence of a coworker Mazzone took 25 loaves of his specialties to the Mineral Farmer's Market in late May 2018 and sold out in an hour. He then decided to start baking for retail sales and only accepted local subcontracting jobs reserving Fridays for bread baking.

"People asked if I would come back," he said. "I went to 40, then 60 and one Saturday, 120 loaves. I just about sold out each time."

Mixing and kneading dough then baking all night was overwhelming, and his house's kitchen became inadequate. That's when Mazzone converted the workshop and purchased the equipment and ovens that bake as many as 50 loaves at a time. This upgrade ensured an adequate assortment of fresh, crusty bread for his customer.

"I use King Arthur flour and other quality ingredients like extra virgin olive oil," he said. "Above all, I find time in the kitchen to be creative and have fun."

And his future plans? Mazzone enjoys working with new recipe combinations, perhaps sun-dried tomatoes or jalapeño and cheese. Maybe a sourdough bread that uses hops for sale at a brewery? Bagels and rolls are considerations. But, above all, quality is vital and branching out too quickly means too many long hours or hiring some part time help.

Mazzone welcomes anyone wanting fresh bread in small or large quantities to contact him at vinzo@ymail.com or 540-903-0811. Otherwise, customers seeking a single loaf or two can browse his selections at Nourish Louisa or Dickinson's Store and, starting in May, each Saturday morning at the Mineral Farmer's Market.
