Orange County Welcomes Festive Holiday Season

When winter arrives, it's time to indulge in local, seasonal wines, and holiday feasts. Towns of Orange and Gordonsville transform into old-fashioned holiday villages, James Madison's Montpelier is adorned with vintage 19th century holiday customs and the Market at Grelen's Enchanted Extravaganza features artisans in a farm market setting. December offers many holiday events and special experiences to enjoy the festive season in Orange County, Virginia.

As the holiday frenzy subsides, gather your family and friends and visit Montpelier. Between December 26 and January 1, all kids ages 14 and under get free admission for any House tour.

The free tours make for an affordable and enriching winter experience. Admission to the House includes the opportunity to explore the exhibition "The Mere Distinction of Colour" and join "Montpelier's Enslaved Community" walking tour. Montpelier also will be offering its "Discovering Montpelier: A Family Friendly Tour," an interactive experience for families that involves discovering artifacts and documents, participating in kid-friendly activities, and touring the House and its surroundings.

Kids will love our "Mysteries of Montpelier" exhibition in the Visitor Center, where they can create their own miniature museum displays, touch artifacts from the property, and take a picture at a selfie station!

Purchase your tickets online and receive $2 off each ticket!

Sunday, December 15:
12:00 P.M. – 3:00 P.M. Open House

Monday, December 16 – Friday, December 20:
12:00 PM – 3:00 PM. Ellwood Open

On Saturday, December 14, Friends of Wilderness Battlefield will host our 11th annual event: "A 19th Century Christmas at Ellwood Manor." The doors will open at 9:00 A.M. and children of all ages may visit with Santa and enjoy making period arts and crafts until 12:00 P.M. Parents will want to be sure to bring their cameras! After Santa departs at NOON, the house will remain open until 2:00 P.M., for guests who would like to enjoy the beautiful period decorations provided by the Fawn Lake Garden Club.

The house will be open again on Sunday, December 15, from 12:00 P.M. – 3:00 P.M., with live period music provided by Evergreen Shade, for visitors who would prefer to enjoy the decorated house in a more relaxed setting. Friends of Wilderness Battlefield volunteers will be available to talk with visitors about the history of the house and volunteer opportunities with the organization throughout the day.

Because of the beautiful decorations and hard work provided by the Fawn Lake Garden Club and FoWB volunteers, Ellwood will also be open from 12:00 PM – 3:00 PM the following week (December 16 – 20) from 12:00 – 3:00 for visitors to enjoy.

In the case of a major inclement weather event, please check our website and/or Facebook page for possible cancelations.

Known by many as the "Gospel Temptations," Larnell Starkey & The Spiritual Seven Gospel Singers is made up of brothers, sons and cousins who are all members of the Chestnut Grove Missionary Baptist Church in Wirtz, Virginia. Their music, a zestful blend of traditional gospel with a twist of contemporary soul, showcases the group's amazing vocal harmonies from high-flying falsettos to the deep rich sounds of the low bass. For 50 years, this award-winning ensemble has moved the spirit of people of all ages and denominations.

Takes place in the Main Stage Theatre in the V. Earl Dickinson Building, located on Piedmont Virginia Community College's Main Campus in Charlottesville.

The Rescuers

As rescue groups and animal shelters struggle to find homes for unwanted or abused animals, individuals can also be credited with opening their hearts and their homes. The dog that wanders the neighborhood, the cat that hides in a barn hayloft or the pet that an older person must give up because of living or health concerns are often lucky enough to find caring persons to take in them. Over this and future issues of Louisa Life, people will share their stories of compassion.

Karen Donnelly and Teagan

Having been rescued by a dog as a toddler, I believe it must be in my psyche to return the favor. For years, my father told the story which occurred on the farm just outside of the town of Louisa, where my mother grew up. My grandparents, H. Ryland and Mary Hester, had a mule, and I can still envision my grandfather plowing a field with the animal.

One weekend, when I was about two-and-a-half, my parents, a newborn sister, our dog Blaze and I were visiting from our home in Northern Virginia. Numerous relatives including my mother's siblings and spouses greeted us. In the excitement of the usual oohing and aahing over the new baby, as well as catching up on local gossip, I had wandered out a screen door and toward the mule's enclosure.

At the moment my father realized I wasn't in the house, Blaze bolted through the door and headed in the direction of the pasture, as my father and many of the folks from the house ran behind. I had apparently ventured toward the mule's enclosure which was a ways off and beyond a number of outbuildings. My father said that, as he approached the field, he heard braying and peals of laughter. He could see the mule's rear heels, kicking up into the air. Just beneath those heels, I sat with my back against the barn, laughing at the spectacle occurring a few inches above my head.

My father stopped, frantically thinking how to pull me away from danger. Suddenly, as the mule's head came down to execute its next kick, Blaze, with perfect timing, leapt up and bit into the mule's nose. The mule shook his head but the dog held on and the kicking ceased. Only when my father grabbed me and moved us to safety, did Blaze let go of the mule's bloodied nose. Perhaps, Blaze's action engrained in me that love of dogs.

As a result, I have owned numerous dogs - all of them rescues. While a teen, I worked for a veterinarian. One day someone brought in a young, scrawny, pitiful dog they'd found on the road. Unable to locate the owner, the veterinarian offered to spay, immunize and worm her, if I was willing to keep her. I named the skittish and fearful puppy, Gretchen. She soon learned to trust me and blossomed into a beautiful dog with a collie's tan body and white neck.

Gretchen would be the first of several rescue dogs with varying personalities that my husband Steve and I have welcomed into our family. Nanna was a nurturing and tolerant large bearded collie mix. Mickey was a small border collie/terrier mix with a cock-of-the-walk, impulsive personality that we all found hilarious. Our children grew up reading James Herriot's books and the stories of the animals that the British veterinarian encountered in his practice. So, they shared our enthusiasm in caring for and loving dogs.

Now, as empty nesters, we have Laddie who is a small border collie/setter mix and our most recent rescue Teagan, an Australian shepherd mix we adopted from a North Carolina rescue group earlier this year. Teagan, too, was shy and skittish and bore a very thin, sparse coat with a large scar down her back. Our vet believes the scar was the outcome of a flame or chemical burn.

In Gaelic, Teagan means "perfect" or "beautiful." We take great joy that in having brought Teagan's diet up to speed, and, with lots of tender loving care, her coat has grown thick and beautifully over the scar. She, like all our rescued pups, has blossomed into happy, healthy dog.

Richard Hinde and Priscilla

I have to admit that I was always a lab/shepherd person, but that ended when the first Jack Russell Terrier entered my life. I've been raising and rescuing them since I retired from the Navy in 1986. Over the years, I've had as many as five living with me on a farm in Louisa County.

In April 2017, I lost KC (Kinda A Cute) at the age of 15.5 years. Then, in September

Riley-Moose passed at the age of 16. Although the house was empty without them, I didn't feel I was ready for another one.

Finally, in January 2018, I started to search for another companion. Pet Finders was the search engine of choice and, of course, Jack Russell Terrier was the breed of choice. I visited the website periodically for several weeks, but none of the available JRTs seem like a perfect match.

Laddie and Teagan pose for their owner Karen Donnelly, perhaps in hope of a treat.

Most items destined for use in David Robertson's hobby are broken tools which the average person would dispose at a landfill. Discarded pliers, nuts, shovels, rebar and saw blades become novelty ornaments when he combines them with used horseshoes. His creativity seems limitless as Robertson turns the cast offs into whimsical cats, colorful lobsters, pink flamingoes, scarf-wearing years, he has assisted a local welder on a part-time basis. But, about a year ago, while attending a neighborhood yard sale, Robertson's eye caught pieces crafted from horseshoes.

"I've always tinkered with something like making things from wood," he said. "I was bitten by the horseshoe idea and started making my unique versions using old tools and hardware."

But, the difficult component to his hobby is locating steel horseshoes. Since they can be costly to buy new, Robertson relies on numerous local farriers for a supply of used one. His craft can require as many as 100 in a week.

Then, a photo of a 10-year-old tri-colored female JRT was posted by Lizzy's Lodge, a nonprofit rescue organization in Silver Spring, Maryland. But, I even had my doubts about her. After about four times of passing over her, I asked for more information. Priscilla, then called Pinkus, and her sister Mulva were living with their second family which included three kids and a German Sheppard. Fans of "Seinfeld" will recognize the names.

Unfortunately, the two Jack Russells were starting to fight with each other, even to the point of vet visits. So, before either dog or the children got seriously hurt, putting both of them up for adoption in separate forever homes was the chosen option.

I sent my JRT application, including the name of my veterinarian and personal references, to the rescue organization. The response from the owner was that "I was just the type of person she was looking for to adopt the dog."

We arranged a meet and greet at Wolf Trap in Northern Virginia. As I was filling out the adoption papers, I was told Pinkus might not go home with me. I guess I was still being evaluated. Then, as I was signing the final documents, I glanced over and noticed the family was taking her stuff out of their truck and putting everything in mine. Obviously, they considered me suitable.

Needless to say, the Jack Russell came home with me and promptly adjusted to her new name Priscilla, or Ms. Pris, so called because she thinks she owns me! She has settled in quickly, loves being a lap dog with no other canine competition and accepts her status as a full fledged family member.

often rusted. So, the preparation phase is the most time-consuming as Robertson works in his heated workshop, a converted garage in the Oakland community.

"I remove the nails and then pressure-wash the shoes. I'll then sandblast them to remove any crud," he said. "Next, I sort them according to size, which can range from pony to workhorse."

Robertson will make several of the same design simultaneously. For holiday season sales, he is currently emphasizing snowmen, Christmas trees and angels. After selecting the appropriate-sized cleaned shoes, he grinds and bends them before welding. He uses a heating torch, if necessary, and a band saw to cut thinner metal pieces such as forks and saw blades.

This is when Robertson's imagination kicks in. Large nails create the legs of a crab, washers make a snowman's eyes, fork tongs form an owl's feet or vise grips become a lobster's claws. Several clear coats, such as on his patina owls, or select colors sprayed with rust-resistant paints on various creatures provide the finishing touches. Multi-colored pieces often involve taping and detailed brush work.

Last spring, Robertson successfully began retail sales at the Mineral Farmer's Market on Saturday mornings. During the year, he attended numerous street festivals, winery events and craft shows in Louisa and surrounding counties and plans to set up a booth at the Louisa Christmas Craft Festival at Courthouse Square on Saturday, December 7. A selection of his work is available at the Corner Market and More on Main Street in the town of Louisa.

Sales have resulted in a learning curve. Clients seem to prefer pieces to decorate their patios, lawns or docks. Not every item sold quickly, but Robertson found a solution to his overstock of crabs.

"When I first started, I made lots of crabs, but soon realized they were not always a big seller," he said. "So, I started painting them in college colors and they became popular."

The artisan acknowledges that he considers the horseshoe projects as a hobby, wants to work at his own pace and then sell enough to cover his expenses as well as a little extra to perhaps cover another of his interests. Rods and reels hang on one wall of his workshop.

"In the spring and the fall, the fish are biting," he said.

David Robertson admits that he often buys rust-resistant spray paint by the case.
